DUST REGULATIONS

Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations 2002

These regulations are designed to help prevent exposure to crystalline silica and construction dust or, where unavoidable, to control airborne exposure limits to 0.1mg/m³ per 8 hour TWA. Under COSHH rules, a qualified person must carry out a risk assessment for any activity that might cause dust exposure.

Your risk assessment must include:

- Analysing your workplace to identify any hazardous substances or likelihood of extreme dust exposure
- Dealing with any hazards and eliminating risks as far as possible
- Making sure you and your workforce are safely equipped to do the job by eliminating, reducing, isolating and controlling dust or using PPE and discipline
- Giving your staff information and training on relevant hazards.

NOISE REGULATIONS

The Control of Noise at Work Regulations 2005

These regulations aim to make sure that workers are protected from excessive noise which could result in hearing loss.

The regulations mean you must:

- Assess the risk to workers' health if noise exceeds 80 decibels
- Provide hearing protection if average daily or weekly noise exposure exceeds 85 decibels
- Not expose employees to noise louder than 87 decibels, taking into consideration any reduction in exposure from hearing protection.

HEALTH & SAFETY INFORMATION

HAND/ARM VIBRATION

Hand/Arm Vibration is vibration transmitted from handheld, powered work equipment into the operator's hands and arms. Regular or excessive exposure can lead to Hand Arm Vibration Syndrome, or White Finger Disease.

Hand Arm/Vibration Syndrome (HAVS) HAVS affects the joints, muscles, nerves and blood vessels of the hand, wrist and arm. The symptoms are tingling in the fingers and a reduced ability to work in cold or damp conditions. You'll notice your fingers becoming numb and turning white, and a loss of strength in your hands.

You might also experience pain, distress and sleep disturbance. You're at risk of HAVS if you regularly use handheld power tools and machines.

Ways to reduce the risk from vibration are:

- Keep warm and wear protective gloves
- Take regular short breaks and exercise your hands
- Do not grip the tool too tightly
- Only used tools that are serviced regularly
- Avoid the use of blunt chisels or drill bits
- Follow the safety instructions supplied with the machine
- Investigate the use of an alternative tool with a reduced vibration level.

WORKING AT HEIGHT

Working at Height Regulations 2005

The regulations aim to help you manage and select the most appropriate equipment for working at height. The regulations apply to anyone, anywhere, at any height and at all times – whether you're employed, self-employed or a subcontractor.

What you need to do:

1. Could you use other equipment, such as extendable tools or lifting equipment, instead of working at height?
2. If you've decided that it's absolutely necessary to work at height, you must do everything you can to prevent a fall:
 - Properly plan and organise the work before you start
 - Make sure all employees/contractors involved in the job are competent
 - Carry out a full risk assessment on the job, work environment and surfaces
 - Use this to select the most appropriate safety equipment, or other measures
3. Minimise the consequences of a fall by using the appropriate safety equipment or other measure correctly, and making sure all equipment is properly maintained and inspected.

Further information can be found on the Health & Safety Executive website: www.hse.gov.uk
